Rule 1301:7-9-09 designates areas of the state as being sensitive for the protection of human health and the environment. These corresponded with sole source aquifers, as designated over the years by the Administrator of the U.S. EPA. At the rule's inception in 1992, the only way to describe these areas was by referring to township section numbers and survey tracts. If even the smallest portion of the section was inside a sensitive area, the entire section had to be included, resulting in overprotection of areas that were not truly sensitive. Advances in geographical information technology now allows owners and operators to determine precisely whether a UST site is located above a sole source aquifer, and can be referenced within the appropriate rules. This rule is therefore no longer needed and may be rescinded.

8. If the rule incorporates a text or other material by reference and the agency claims the incorporation by reference is exempt from compliance with sections 121.71 to 121.74 of the Revised Code because the text or other material is generally available to persons who reasonably can be expected to be affected by the rule, provide an explanation of how the text or other material is generally available to those persons:

10. If the rule is being rescinded and incorporates a text or other material by reference, and it was infeasible for the agency to file the text or other material, provide an explanation of why filing the text or other material was infeasible:

This response left blank because filer specified online that the rule does not incorporate a text or other materials by reference.
